WHO The Gwinnett County Public Library in Centerville is strategically located near several key cities- Snellville, Lilburn, and Stone Mountain so it serves a wide range of community members. The Centerville Branch was built in July 2002, the first GCPL branch to be located in a shared building. The 12,000 sq. foot branch continues to share space with a one-stop center focused on health and recreational services. The branch includes a large children's area and a makerspace known as the Learning Lab. The grounds include a walking path and pond.

"For 20 years, despite economic ups and downs, wars, pandemics, and social unrest, the staff of the Centerville Branch have been steadfastly providing the highest quality service to their community. While we may hope for less drama in the years to come, I am confident this tradition of service excellence will be undiminished in the future," said Charles Pace, Executive Director of the Gwinnett County Public Library.
